

Critical Thinking For Law Enforcement Officers and Analysts

Many federal, state and local law enforcement agencies have identified “critical thinking” as a weakness in most officers and analysts today. Current law enforcement training academies and colleges fail to provide adequate training in both deductive and inductive logic in their law enforcement curriculum. This has led to weaknesses in our abilities to define problems, develop inferences, and make good decisions. eLearning Intelligence provides practical training in critical thinking applications, using real-world examples and exercises to help students develop a solid foundation in critical thinking. This class will benefit investigators, officers and both crime and intelligence analysts in everyday situations. The class will be beneficial to law enforcement personnel who provide, administrative, investigative, intelligence and or analytical support. These learned skills and techniques will also prove beneficial to any agency who has implemented or wants to implement a “Compstat” performance accountability program.

Dr. Ed Rudd, CEO eLearning Intelligence, and Brian Gray, Manager, Riverside County Sheriff’s Department Crime & Intelligence Analysis Unit, will present this 3-day critical thinking workshop for law enforcement professionals.
