Help protect our nuclear industry Principal Analyst

Level 6, Salary up to £45,919 pa

This role is being re-advertised at a higher level

Based at Headquarters in Culham, Oxfordshire

The Civil Nuclear Constabulary is a specialised armed service which provides world-class frontline policing for the protection of civil nuclear materials on sites and in transit.

Justifiably proud of our international reputation for providing a flexible, responsive and professional service, we now need a Principal Analyst to help us maintain our high standards in the future. Your role will be to coordinate the whole business planning, risk and performance reporting cycle, utilising the National Intelligence Model (NIM), so as to provide a consistent picture for Chief Officer and Police Authority decision making.

In addition you will be required to research the business environment identifying issues needing to be tackled, formulate proposals and present options to the Senior Command Team. You will also have the ability to market and develop the NIM model throughout the organisation, clearly demonstrating the benefits and leading on the production of the Strategic Assessment.

You will have experience of working with the National Intelligence Model or similar business management models, as well as a background in strategic planning and a good knowledge of broad political, economic, legislative trends and risk management.

Comfortable acting as an ambassador for the Constabulary and the Department, you will have excellent research, analytical and document writing skills, and be able to synthesize complex issues into crisp, clear documents. These will be supported by your ability to be discrete and diplomatic at all times, especially when dealing with sensitive material of a confidential nature.

We offer an important and rewarding career with excellent potential for development, along with a range of benefits, including pension, generous holidays and flexible working
